HRGreen

One of the nation's longest operating engineering firms, HR Green has been involved in transportation for more than 100 years. The firm traces its origins to 1914 when Howard Ruggles Green opened an engineering office in Cedar Rapids, Iowa. Throughout the 1920s, Green was a prominent proponent of the "Good Roads" movement, and thus, the movement that would later become the Transportation Alliance.

Today, HR Green is a leading consulting engineer for the transportation industry, with a transportation business driven by "the need for infrastructure that facilitates safe and efficient travel by all means while maintaining environmental compliance."
